ABSTRACT

Information on foreign student policies at 1,955 accredited U.S. colleges and universities is presented. Separate sections for undergraduate and graduate students provide detailed information in a tabular format, including degree levels offered, enrollment for both foreign and U.S. students, admissions tests and English as a foreign language requirements, admissions and financial aid application deadlines, costs to foreign students for the academic and calendar year, financial aid for foreign students, intensive English-language programs, and sources of information and advising for foreign students in their country. The directory also provides advice to help foreign students prepare for college in the United States, as well as: a glossary of college terms, a list of college addresses and telex numbers, checklists, a predeparture calendar, information on the Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse, a code list of fields of study, and worksheets to help in the process of selecting and applying to colleges. Preface

The College Board is a nonprofit membership association composed of colleges, schools, systems, and educational associations and agencies serving secondary and higher education. The Board helps students who are making the move from high school to college through programs and services that include guidance, admissions, placement, credit by examination, and financial aid.

Since 1941, the College Board has published The College Handbook, the classic guide to U.S. colleges and universities. The Foreign Student Supplement, published for the first time this year, recognizes the special information needs of students from overseas who plan to apply to colleges in the United States.

Prospective college and university students who do not reside in the United States have unique obstacles to overcome when choosing an educational institution. The investment of a considerable amount of money and time in an unknown campus environment poses a significant risk. Lack of direct contact with domestic media, lack of access to university campuses, and lack of exposure to basic information about the U.S. educational system all increase the difficulty of choosing an appropriate educational environment from outside of the United States. The greatest difficulty of all, however, is gaining access to reliable and objective information about how U.S. institutions handle foreign students' special requirements.

By focusing its unique data-gathering resources on the important questions faced by foreign students, the College Board hopes it will increase the chances that the investment these students make will produce strong benefits. The information included in this publication was provided to the College Board by institutions themselves through the Annual Survey of Colleges, 1987. The questionnaires were completed by participating university officials during the winter and spring of 1987. The information was checked by College Board editors and, when necessary, was verified with the institutions.

There are more than 3,100 accredited institutions of higher education in the United States. Some of these institutions do not have the facilities to handle the special requirements of foreign students. Others may have a curriculum that is focused in such a way as to be considered of little practical application to students returning to their home country to share their new knowledge. For these reasons, the College Board asked the institutions whether they wished to be included in this publication. A total of 1,955 undergraduate and graduate institutions chose to participate in the 1987-88 edition of the Foreign Student Supplement. The Board hopes that by this process of self-selection, inappropriate placement of students will be avoided.

This book was developed by the International Education Office with advice and counsel from members of its Advisory Committee on International Education. Ellen Mashiko, Director of Educational Information Services at the Japan-United States Educational Commission (Fulbright office) for more than 15 years, provided expertise for development of Part I of this book, Applying to College in the United States. Special thanks to the staff of Data-Based Publications and Services who coordinated work on the publication and provided data for the college information listings through the College Board's Annual Survey of Colleges. Jean Marzone, Joseph Morsicato, Susan Lovell, and Robin Swados contributed valuable editorial assistance. Finally, this book could not have been published without the support of thousands of college officers who provided detailed information on foreign student policies and procedures at their institutions.

The College Handbook Foreign Student Supplement is the culmination of many years of cooperation between the College Board's Office of International Education, government agencies involved with international educational exchange, overseas educational advisers, and international admissions officers at U.S. universities. All of these professionals share a common belief that the proper placement of and service to foreign students at U.S. campuses is critical to the development of mutual understanding through the exchange process.

Part I. Applying to college in the United States

Thinking about study in the United States?

Applying to college in the United States from another country can be exciting and challenging. It can also, at times, be frustrating or disappointing—but it need not be too difficult if you get accurate information and follow the required procedures carefully.

There are about 400,000 students from foreign countries enrolled at 3,000 colleges, universities, and graduate institutions in the United States. Most of these institutions have many more applicants than they can accept in any year. As a result, college admissions can be very competitive, especially for applicants from outside the United States.

The key to successful admission to college lies in careful planning and timely completion of the required steps. This handbook will help take you through these steps. Keep in mind the following advice during your college planning:

- Begin planning early.
- Read and use this book and The College Handbook.
- Get current catalogs from the colleges themselves.
- Consult an educational advising center.
- Talk with students in your country who have studied in the United States.
- Be realistic about how you will pay for your education.
- Complete all steps in the admissions and financial aid process as early as possible.
- Do not wait until the year you want to go to college to get information.
- Do not rely on information you hear that may be outdated, incomplete, or inaccurate.
- Do not depend on applying for financial aid after you arrive in the United States.
- Do not leave out any steps in the admissions process.

Why study in the United States?

Many students come to the United States because of the diversity of educational opportunities available. There are over 500 major fields of study offered at more than 3,000 colleges and universities. These colleges and universities are located in some of the world's largest cities and in rural communities, in a variety of climates, and in areas of diverse cultural opportunities and ethnic heritage.

Making a wise college choice begins with thinking about your reasons for going to college in general and for going to college in the United States in particular. Writing down your reasons can help you think clearly about your goals.

Make a list of your reasons for applying to college in the United States, putting your most important reason at the top of your list.

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____
4. _____
5. _____

Discuss your reasons with your parents, teachers, and others who can help you think about your educational and life goals.

What are you like?

The picture you have of yourself—your academic ability, interests, attitudes, and personality—is very helpful in choosing colleges and in completing the application forms that you will submit. Colleges will ask you about yourself because they are interested in you and believe that personal factors play an important role in academic success. Consider your strengths and weaknesses, your likes and dislikes.

Write a statement about yourself in each of the following areas, using the questions to help you begin. Do your family, friends, and teachers agree with your self-description? How does it relate to your wish to study in the United States? Are your reasons for wanting to study at a college or university in the United States realistic, based on what you know about yourself?

Academic. Are you a good student? Does your school record reflect your abilities and achievement? What are your strongest subjects? Your weakest subjects? Do you learn best in a competitive or relaxed academic situation? Do you like school and study?

Extracurricular. Do you participate in school, community, or other activities? To what clubs, sports, or other groups do you belong? Are you a leader of any activity or group? What are your interests and hobbies? What do you enjoy most?

Personal attitudes and values. Do you prefer routine and the familiar or change and the new? Do you want to be near family and friends or do you want to be independent and away from them for awhile? How important is it for you to be among people with backgounds and values similar to yours? How would you describe yourself?

How good is your English?

English-language proficiency is extremely important to your success in applying to and enrolling in a U.S. college. You will be expected to read, write, understand, and speak English to carry out your studies. Conversational English only will not be sufficient. Colleges and universities require English-language proficiency at the time of application and measure your skills by asking you to take a standardized test of English. Although you may have excellent academic and personal qualifications, you may be denied admission if your English-language proficiency is too low. Be honest with yourself and evaluate your English-language skills so that you can prepare further before starting the admissions process. Answer the following questions to help you evaluate your English.

If you answered "Yes" to A or B in all or most of these statements, there is a good chance that you may meet English proficiency requirements.

Do your teachers and others qualified to evaluate your English-language proficiency agree with your evaluation? Have they made any recommendations on how you can improve your English? Are you following up on these recommendations? What are you doing to improve your English?

Planning to pay for your education

Just as the types of educational institutions in the United States vary widely, do so the costs of education. At present, average costs for United States residents at four-year undergraduate colleges vary from about $5,800 to $12,000 per nine-month academic year. These costs include tuition and fees, room and board, books and supplies, and other living expenses. Costs for foreign students will be higher. You must consider living expenses during the summer and round-trip transportation to your home country. Actual tuition and fees and estimated living expenses for foreign students at individual institutions are listed in Part II.

Although there are government-sponsored and institutional financial aid programs, the cost of education in the United States is primarily the responsibility of the student and the student's family. A few colleges have financial aid for students from outside the United States, but this aid is not enough to meet the need of all students.

You are responsible for planning how you will pay for your educational, living, and transportation expenses. Answer the following questions to begin your financial plan.

Have you consulted your family and others about your plans for financing your stay in the United States? Have they agreed to support you? If you are applying for a scholarship or fellowship, have you submitted all of the required documents? When will you be notified of the results?

Reading the section of this book on college costs will help you find out whether your financial plan is realistic. You can also use the listing of undergraduate and graduate colleges in Part II to see current expenses for foreign students. But first, you should choose which colleges to find out about. To do this, you should know some facts about the structure of education in the United States and the various types of colleges.

U.S. higher education

There are a few facts about the structure of U.S. education that may be helpful in your early planning. This section will give you some general information on

- the organization of U.S. education
- the degrees offered
- the types of institutions
- accreditation
- grading and evaluation

Organization

How educational systems are organized varies from country to country. Higher education in the United States may be very different from education in your country.

Students in the United States generally begin higher education after completing 12 years of elementary and secondary school. (Some children attend one or more years of preschool or kindergarten before entering elementary school.) The typical student receives a high school (secondary school) diploma at age 17 or 18.

The first level of higher (postsecondary) education is undergraduate study, which includes two-year and four-year programs. Two-year programs generally lead to the associate degree. There are two types of associate degree programs: occupational/vocational (sometimes called "terminal") programs, which prepare the student for a trade or technical job, and transfer programs, which provide the first two years of general education for transfer to a four-year program.

Four-year colleges and universities offer programs that lead to the bachelor's degree. The first two years usually are spent in general education. This may include courses in English composition, history, science, mathematics, languages, and social sciences. The courses in the first two years may depend on your chosen field of study. The second two years are devoted to your major field. Five years of undergraduate study may be required for some fields, such as pharmacy or architecture. A few institutions offer only the last two years of undergraduate study; these are called upper-division institutions.

Graduate study follows the completion of undergraduate education at the bachelor's-degree level. Graduate study leads to the master's and doctoral (or doctor's) degrees. A master's degree generally requires one or two years of full-time study. Doctoral degrees require at least three years of full-time study.

First professional degrees in fields such as medicine, law, dentistry, and theology usually are earned after completing the bachelor's degree. A few programs may be entered after two or three years of undergraduate study. First professional degree programs generally require at least three years of study after the bachelor's degree. Admission to some programs at all degree levels can be very competitive, but some first professional degree programs in particular may limit admission to applicants from U.S. colleges only.

Types of educational institutions

Degree programs are offered at many different types of institutions in the United States. Some of these institutions are public and some are private. Although nearly all institutions receive some financial support from federal and state governments, public institutions rely heavily on these public funds, while private institutions depend more on tuition, fees, and contributions from foundations and private citizens.

There are also some postsecondary schools called "proprietary" schools, which are organized on a profit-making basis by their owners. Some of these schools are accredited by specialized agencies. (See the accreditation information later in this section.)

Undergraduate degree programs generally are offered at these types of colleges:

Associate degree

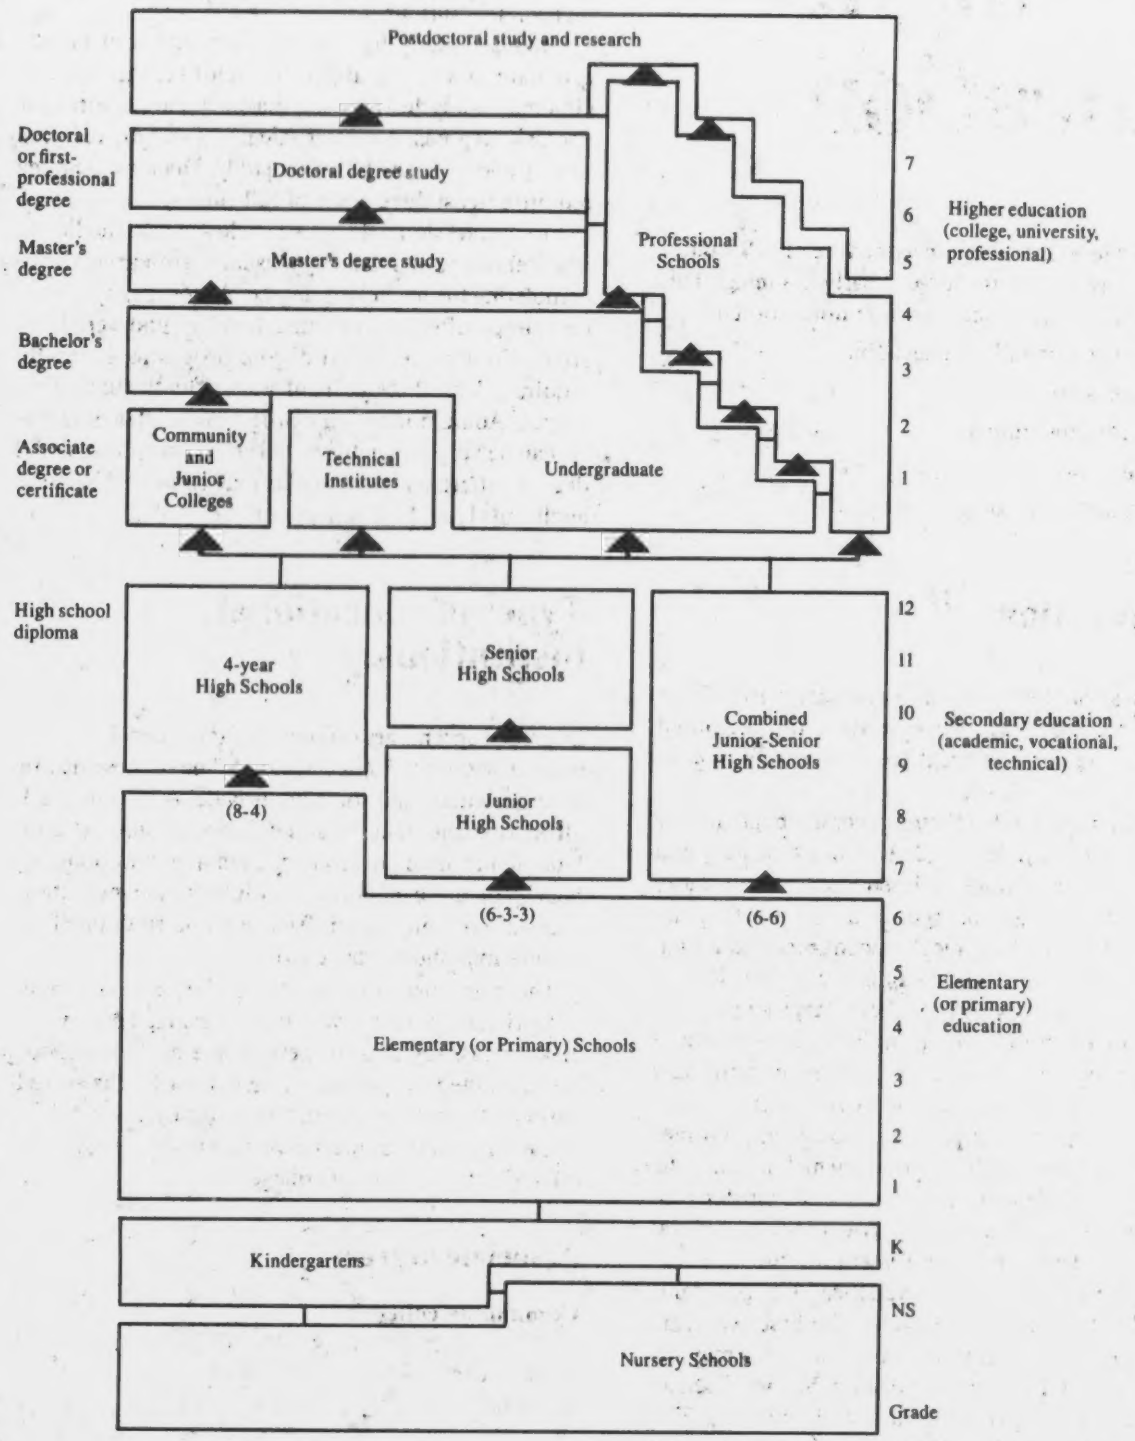
Community college

- Two years
- Public

Junior college

- Two years
- Private

Education in the United States



Other colleges

- Two-year program at a four-year college
- Public or private

Bachelor's degree

Liberal arts college

- Four years
- Arts and sciences

University

- Four years (five for some programs)
- Liberal arts and preprofessional programs
- Also have graduate programs

Other colleges

- Four years (five for some programs)
- Preprofessional programs; some also offer liberal arts

Upper-division institution

- Two years (follows two years of study at another college)
- Preprofessional programs

Two-year public colleges are usually called community colleges, but some junior colleges are public. Preprofessional programs include degree programs in fields such as architecture, education, engineering, and business. Universities are institutions that include undergraduate colleges and at least one graduate division; some also have first professional degree programs in fields such as medicine and law.

Graduate degree programs also are offered at several types of higher education institutions. Master's degrees can be earned at some four-year colleges as well as at universities and institutions that offer graduate study only. These programs usually take one or two years of full-time study to complete. Doctoral and first professional degree programs are offered at universities and graduate-only institutions. Doctoral degrees usually require a minimum of three years beyond the bachelor's degree. First professional degrees require a total of at least six years, including at least two years of undergraduate study.

Accreditation

Accreditation in the United States is a process by which colleges and universities are reviewed by committees of educators and other private citizens. There are six regional accrediting associations in the United States. Some institutions are accredited by other agencies established to review special types of institutions, such as trade and technical schools or religious schools. Accreditation by a regional association or other recognized agency is important for several reasons.

- Credits are more easily transferred from one accredited institution to another.
- Most scholarship, fellowship, and grant programs are available only for study in accredited institutions.
- Degrees and diplomas are more generally recognized among accredited institutions within the United States as well as by governments and universities in other countries.

Accreditation alone is not a guarantee of high standards, but the lack of accreditation may be a warning that the degree or credit earned may not be acceptable to other institutions or the student's government. All the colleges and universities listed in Part II of this book are accredited by either regional associations or national agencies recognized by the U.S. Department of Education and the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation.

Specific programs of study within an institution may be accredited by specialized commissions. Information on accreditation can be found in the current edition of Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education. (See the following list of accrediting associations and information.) This book may be available in a library or advising center in your country.

When you are planning to apply to college in the United States, you should find out about the accreditation of the colleges that interest you. If a college is not accredited by a regional accrediting association or other nationally recognized agency, you should consult an adviser to find out more about the college before you send any application forms or money.

Grading and evaluation

Classroom examinations are given frequently throughout the years of undergraduate education in the United States. Weekly written tests are common, or testing may be limited to two or three written examinations each semester. Testing gives the instructor or professor a basis for awarding grades and gives students an indicator of academic progress compared with other students in the class. At the graduate level, grades are more likely to be based on research papers in combination with some written or oral examinations.

Most colleges in the United States use some version of the following grading system.

Grade			Represents
A	or	4	Consistently high performance
B		3	Above average
C		2	Average
D		1	Minimally passing
E, F		0	Failure

Grades are placed on a student's permanent record at the end of each semester or quarter and are accumulated to determine a grade-point average at the end of each academic year and each level of education.

Choosing colleges

College characteristics

There are many more U.S. colleges than you can or want to apply to. To find colleges that offer what you need, decide what college characteristics are important to you. The worksheet on the next page lists some characteristics that students in the United States generally consider important. Check only those that are important to you. To the right of each characteristic, write your specific preference.

Finding out more about colleges

The more information you can get on colleges, the better your chance of making a good decision on where to apply. There are various sources of information and advising that may be available in your country. The United States government, foreign governments, and nonprofit organizations support these activities. There is usually no cost to you, although a minimal charge may be requested to cover the expense of printing booklets or the postage if you request information by mail. One or more of these sources may be available in your country:

- United States embassies, consulates, American centers and libraries
- Fulbright commissions and foundations
- Binational centers
- Nonprofit exchange organizations such as the Institute of International Education or AMIDEAST
- University information centers and libraries
- Public libraries

If you are not certain what sources are available, telephone or write the U.S. Embassy or the ministry of education in your country stating that (1) you are seeking information and advice about academic study in the United States and (2) you would like to know where to visit or write.

A list of advising centers is provided in this book. Advice from knowledgeable and experienced advisers can help you make realistic plans and complete the admissions process successfully.

Another source of information in your country is students who have studied in the United States. Talk to these people if you have the opportunity. Remember that their experiences will be influenced by the location and type of institution they attended, which may be very different from your plans. However, they should be able to give you some ideas about adjusting to college life in the United States. An advising center may be able to set up discussions or workshops with these students.

The following sources can provide important facts about U.S. colleges.

College guidebooks. College guidebooks give important facts about colleges and universities. You can use these books to begin looking for colleges that have the characteristics you want. Those institutions that wish to provide information specifically to international students are included in this supplement to The College Handbook. These colleges provided current information on foreign student enrollment, tests required, application deadlines, application fees, tuition and fees, room and board, financial aid, and the availability of foreign student advisers, orientation, and intensive English-language programs. The College Handbook provides up-to-date information on the size, location, degrees offered, majors, admissions, costs, student profile, activities, athletics, and special programs and services at the more than 3,000 accredited colleges and universities in the United States. The Index of Majors provides lists of major fields of study at the undergraduate and graduate degree levels and the colleges that offer each major.

The directory at the end of this supplement provides the mailing addresses, telephone numbers, and telex numbers (if available) for getting more information from the institutions listed in this book.

Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse. This service helps students interested in undergraduate or graduate study in the United States by identifying institutions that meet their needs and interests. Sponsored by the National Liaison Committee on Foreign Student Admissions and operated by the College Board, the Clearinghouse sorts by computer through the characteristics of more than 1,900 colleges to get a list that matches the characteristics chosen by each student. The Clearinghouse is available through advising centers, or you can use the form in the appendix of this book.

College catalogs. Colleges produce catalogs and bulletins that give up-to-date information on their admissions requirements, major fields of study, faculty, college costs, and other important factors. When you have a list of colleges you are considering seriously, you should obtain the current catalog from each of these colleges.

College representatives. Some colleges send representatives to other countries to talk about their colleges and to meet students who may be interested in applying. Contact the U.S. Embassy, an advising center, or the ministry of education to find out whether representatives from colleges will be visiting your country.

College costs

The cost of going to college in the United States is something you and your family should think about early in your college planning. Costs differ from one institution to another, so you should make an estimate for each of the colleges you are considering. Your total budget should include the following expenses for each year of study in the United States.

Tuition and fees

Tuition and fees are generally charged on the basis of a nine-month (September-May) academic year. Some colleges also offer course work in the summer period (June-August); if you plan to take courses in the summer, you must increase your budget to allow for tuition and fees for a 12-month period. Remember that tuition and fees for foreign students listed in this book are generally for the 1987-88 academic year; these costs have been increasing by about six to seven percent per year in recent years. If you are estimating your costs for the future, add this increase for each year.

Room and board

Room and board includes the charges for a room in college housing (usually shared with one other student) and regular meals for the nine-month academic year. Add the cost for housing and meals during the summer period on-campus (if available) or off-campus.

Books and supplies

Colleges estimate the costs for books and supplies for the academic year. If you are planning to study in a field that requires special supplies, such as engineering, art, or architecture, your expenses are likely to be greater than the average.

Transportation

Estimate your travel expenses for round-trips to your home country during the period of study in the United States, and add commuting expenses to and from college if you expect to live off campus at any time.

Other personal expenses

These expenses include the cost of basic goods and services. Health insurance is required. If you have dependents—a spouse and/or children—or if you have special medical needs, substantial additional funds will be needed to meet your living expenses. Most institutions have an estimate of these basic costs.

Comparing college costs

The lists in Part II of this book give academic and calendar year costs broken down by tuition and fees and living expenses. Living expenses include room and board, books and supplies, and other personal expenses. They do not include travel to and from your home country. Remember that college costs are rising and are likely to be somewhat higher by the time you enter college. Be sure to confirm the current costs with the institution at the time you apply.

Financial aid

Financial aid to students in the United States includes (1) scholarships or grants, (2) loans, which have have to be repaid, and (3) jobs, which provide money to help pay college costs. Financial aid may cover all college costs or may amount to only a very small fraction of the total cost. Jobs require a commitment of several hours per week; teaching and research assistantships for graduate students require up to 20 hours per week under the supervision of a faculty member.

U.S. sources of financial aid include federal and state governments, private foundations, companies, and universities. Financial aid programs usually have specific requirements such as financial need, citizenship, or field and level of study. The amounts of financial aid awards have been decreasing because there is less money available from some programs, there are more students applying for aid, and it costs more to support a student.

It is a good idea to investigate sources of financial aid in your own country as well as those in the United States. Keep in mind that the application process for scholarships and other financial aid programs may begin as early as 18 months before your planned date of enrollment. Contact an advising center, the U.S. Embassy, or other organizations about financial aid as soon as possible.

Part-time work outside of the college or university is sometimes considered a source of additional income once a student is in the United States. Keep in mind that people traveling in the United States on a student visa are not allowed to seek employment until one year of academic study has been completed successfully. Permission from the college and the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service must then be received before a student is allowed to work part time. It is not easy for students to find work, and the wages earned in part-time work will not meet major expenses.

Comparing colleges

The more information you can gather on colleges, the better your chance of making a good decision about which colleges to apply to. Look at the college listings in Part II of this book, the college descriptions in The College Handbook, and other sources of information. There is no ideal number of colleges to select for applications, but advisers often recommend that students identify at least three to six colleges.

The following worksheet can help you compare colleges on the basis of the characteristics important in choosing and applying to college. For each characteristic, write how each college matches (or does not match) your preference. A sample worksheet is provided. Some of the characteristics you may be comparing are:

Degree level. For which degree do you plan to study at this college?

Location. In what city or town, state, and region of the country is the college located?

Type of institution. Is this a public or private institution? Is it a two-year community college, four-year liberal arts college, university, graduate institution, etc.?

Major. What field or fields of study that interest you does the college offer?

Enrollment by sex. Does the college admit men only, women only, or is it coeducational? (Many single-sex colleges share activities and often classes with nearby coeducational colleges.)

Religious affiliation. Was the college founded by or is it administered by a religious organization? Does this affect student life-style?

Enrollment size. How many students are enrolled in the undergraduate colleges or graduate divisions in which you would be enrolled?

Foreign student enrollment. Does the college enroll many or few students from outside the United States?

Campus environment. Is the college campus urban, suburban, or rural?

Housing. Is on-campus housing available?

Academic background of students. What is the academic background of the students at this college? Do most of them successfully continue their studies at the college after their first year? Do they continue their studies at the graduate level?

Student activities. Are there groups or organizations on campus to support the cultural, political, social, or other activities that interest you?

Athletics. If athletic competition is important to you, does the college offer the sports programs you want?

Test requirements. Is TOEFL required? What is the minimum acceptable score? Are the SAT, ACT, or graduate admissions tests required?

Costs. What are the estimated foreign student costs for tuition and fees, room and board for nine months? For 12 months? (Remember, your miscellaneous personal expenses, health insurance, and travel expenses will also be part of your total budget.)

Financial aid. Is financial aid available to foreign students? How many foreign students receive aid?

Intensive English-language program. Is an on-campus program available to students for whom English is a second language?

Full academic admissions without English proficiency. Will the college accept students provisionally to academic study without meeting English-proficiency requirements?

Deadlines. When must applications for admission and financial aid be completed and received by the college?

What colleges require

Application form

When you have selected the institutions that offer the programs and characteristics that interest you, request application forms and admissions information by writing to the offices listed in the Directory of Colleges in Part II of this book. You can use the application request form provided here or write a letter that includes the information shown on the form. Be sure to type or print clearly and send the letter by airmail. When you are ready to complete the application form, think about your answers to the questions on the form, and type or print clearly. Review the application carefully to see that it is written in clear, grammatical English. Send the application to the address on the form by airmail.

Essay

A personal essay or statement is required by some colleges. The college may request an autobiographical statement or an essay on a specific theme. Take time to think about what you will write. Prepare a draft. Make sure you have expressed your ideas as clearly and completely as possible, and type or print clearly. The essay should be sent airmail with your application form.

Application fee

Most colleges charge an application fee. This fee is usually not refunded even if your application is rejected. Some colleges may waive the fee for applicants who cannot afford to pay it. The application fee must be sent in U.S. dollars; follow the instructions provided with the application form.

Record of academic background

A report (called a "transcript" by U.S. colleges) of the study you have completed must be sent directly by the schools and colleges you have attended to the U.S. institutions. Instructions and sometimes forms will be provided by the colleges to which you apply. The transcripts should be sent by airmail in the envelopes provided. The information sent by your schools and colleges must include the graduation dates and a record of the diplomas and degrees you have received.

Tests

Almost all institutions will require that you take one or more tests as part of the application process. These tests can be used for admissions decisions or for placement—that is, deciding whether you need additional study in some areas or whether you are equal to or ahead of other students being accepted to the college. Test dates are predetermined and require that you apply for a specific test date five or more weeks before the test date to the testing organization in the United States or a testing agency in your country or region. Inquire early about test dates, sites, fees, payment methods, and other test-related matters. There is a section on test information in this book. Commonly required tests in the following areas are:

English proficiency—undergraduate and graduate

Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL), administered by the Educational Testing Service, tests the English-language proficiency of prospective undergraduate and graduate students and others. The test consists of listening comprehension, structure, and written expression, and vocabulary and reading comprehension. The Test of Spoken English (TSE) may also be required by some institutions. Note: In addition to these tests for admission, many colleges give an English-proficiency test to students upon arrival at college; admission may depend on successful performance on this test as well.

Application request form

I am a non-U.S. citizen living outside of the United States. I am interested in academic study at a U.S. college or university. The following is basic information about me and what I plan to study. Please review this form and send me an application packet by airmail.

The following is additional information about myself:

Undergraduate admissions and placement

Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), a College Board test administered by the Educational Testing Service, measures the verbal and mathematical aptitude of prospective undergraduate students. The Test of Standard Written English (TSWE) is given with the SAT.

Achievement Tests (ACH), College Board tests administered by the Educational Testing Service, may also be required by two- and four-year colleges. One to three tests from 13 subject areas may be required.

American College Testing Program Assessment (ACT) may be required by two- and four-year colleges. Tests consist of English, mathematics, natural science, and social studies.

Graduate admissions

Graduate Record Examination (GRE), administered by the Educational Testing Service, includes a general test of verbal, quantitative, and analytical ability and subject tests in 20 areas. Graduate schools may require one test or a combination of tests.

Graduate Management Admission Test (GMAT), administered by the Educational Testing Service, is required by graduate schools of management/business administration. The test includes verbal and quantitative items.

Law School Admission Test (LSAT), administered by the Educational Testing Service, is required of applicants to law school.

Medical College Admission Test (MCAT), administered by the Educational Testing Service, is required of applicants to medical school.

Credit by examination

In addition to admissions tests, some students take tests for credit by examination. These tests can award the student credit for some college course work before entry into college. Many U.S. colleges will recognize successful completion of some examinations given in other countries, such as the International Baccalaureate, for advanced placement and credit in undergraduate programs of study.

Recommendations

Some colleges require that you provide one or more letters of recommendation from a teacher, counselor, employer, or other adult member of the community who knows you. A family member or personal friend is usually not acceptable. The letters should be typed or printed clearly. Give the person writing the letter clear instructions for sending the letter airmail to the address the college provides.

Statement of financial support

A document certifying the amount and source of income available to you for study in the U.S. will be required. Most U.S. institutions will send you instructions and a special form to complete; if no form is provided, you or your sponsor (such as a family member, scholarship or grant-awarding organization in your country, or employer) must explain in detail you or your sponsor's financial situation, sign a statement certifying the intention to pay for all necessary expenses, and attach a current bank statement.

Financial aid forms

If you are applying for financial aid, you must complete a financial aid application form, which is separate from the college application form. You may also be required to complete a standardized form, such as the International Financial Aid Form. (See the section on College Costs in this book for more information on financial aid.) Be sure to answer the questions as completely as possible, and send the forms by airmail to the correct address, which may be different from the address you use for the college application.

Health certificate

A report of a health examination may be required. Follow instructions and use the form sent to you. If a form is not provided, have a health examination and obtain a certificate written in English.

Interview

Many colleges find it useful to interview their applicants in person. For students applying from outside the United States, colleges will either not require an interview or may arrange one with a U.S. college representative in your country.

Audition or portfolio

If you are applying to particular programs such as music, art, or design, you may have to demonstrate your ability. Check the descriptions in The College Handbook and college catalogs to see what is required. When you write to colleges for your application forms, ask how the college would want you to meet their requirements for this specific program.

With all these steps, the application process can be lengthy and time-consuming. It is important, however, to complete all steps. Taking the time to complete the process carefully will help you and the colleges make good decisions about your educational future.

The college admissions planning calendar included here can be used as a guideline. It begins with your early decisions, two years before you plan to enroll.

When to apply

You should begin the application process as soon as you have selected the colleges that best meet your requirements. This usually should be no later than 18 months before the date you expect to begin study in the United States.

Colleges may give a deadline for applications. This is often just a guideline. The college may stop reviewing applications much earlier than this deadline if it fills its class. There also may be no housing and no financial aid if you wait until the deadline to apply.

Make a checklist of the admissions requirements and deadlines from your college comparison worksheet. Set your own completion dates well ahead of the college's stated deadlines, and check off each step as you complete it.

Remember to send all required documents and forms as soon as possible. U.S. colleges usually review applications only when all of the required documents have been received.

Planning calendar for study in the United States

For admission in August or September, begin here two years before admission date...

Find out about sources of U.S. college information in your country—libraries, advising centers, U.S. educational organizations or commissions.

Review the section in this book on choosing and comparing colleges. Use the information on undergraduate or graduate colleges in this book and the college descriptions in The College Handbook to begin a list of colleges to consider.

If English is not your first language, find out about TOEFL—get the information bulletin and registration materials.

Be sure you are taking courses that prepare you for college or graduate study at U.S. educational institutions.

Find out whether the Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse (FSIC) is available through an advising center. Discuss your plans with an adviser, or use the FSIC form at the end of this book.

Ask your adviser or counselor whether U.S. college representatives will be visiting your country. Note the dates and places, and try to attend at least one meeting.

Discuss your plans with your teachers, family, people who work in your field of study, and people who have studied in the United States, if possible.

Write to colleges to request catalogs.

Write for information and registration forms for tests required by the colleges you are considering.

Review your college list based on information you have collected from guidebooks, FSIC, and college catalogs. Try to select three to six institutions (or more) to apply to.

Develop your financial plan. Consider how you will pay for your education, living expenses, and transportation for each year of study in the United States.

Find out about scholarships and other types of financial aid available in your country. Request the application materials.

Register for the SAT and ACH if you plan to take the tests in May.

Check the registration bulletins for graduate admissions tests if you intend to apply for graduate study. Be sure to send your registration form and fees in time to be received by the deadline.

Select a date for taking TOEFL and be sure to send your registration form and fee in time to meet the deadline.

Register for the SAT and ACH if you plan to take the tests in June.

Register for the ACT if you plan to take the test in June.

Write to the colleges you have selected to request their newest catalogs and application forms. Be sure to request financial aid application forms if you intend to apply for aid.

Take the SAT and ACH if you registered for the May test date.

Identify the teachers, counselors, and other adults you will ask for letters of recommendation.

Take the SAT and ACH if you registered for the June test date.

Take the ACT if you registered for the June test date.

If there is a break in your school schedule, use this opportunity to upgrade your English proficiency by reading, writing, and speaking in English whenever you can.

Read college applications instructions carefully to find out what information is required and when it must reach each college to which you are applying.

Request information on intensive English-language programs in the event you do not meet English-proficiency requirements.

Begin a draft of an essay for your applications, if one is required.

One year before admission...

If you have not yet taken admissions tests, or if you and your adviser think you can improve your scores, register for a test date, preferably no later than November.

Find out the procedures at your school (and any other secondary school or college you have attended) for sending your academic records (transcript) to the colleges to which you are applying.

If colleges have provided forms for recommendations, give them to the teachers and other adults you have asked.

Complete the essay for your applications.

Complete the financial aid application forms.

Apply early to colleges.

Take the SAT and ACH if you registered for the November test date.

Be sure you request that test scores of all required tests be sent to all the colleges on your list.

Check to see that recommendations have been sent by the people from whom you requested them.

Be sure that your school (or schools and colleges) has sent your academic records to all the colleges on your list.

Reply promptly and completely to any requests for additional information you may receive from colleges to which you have applied.

Be sure to keep up the quality of your studies. Your complete academic record can be important in admissions decisions.

If you have not already completed all financial aid application forms, be sure to do so now and mail them as soon as possible.

Review your financial plan for your education. If you think you may need additional help, investigate any sources of financial aid in your country that you may have overlooked.

Some colleges with a rolling admissions policy require a response and deposit soon. Note any reply dates that apply to you.

You will probably hear from colleges this month or next. Review the section in this book on what to do if you are accepted at more than one college.

Be sure to send your reply and deposit by the acceptance deadline.

Write to colleges you have not heard from.

Review predeparture procedures.

Confirm housing reservations at the college of your choice.

Apply for a passport.

Apply for a visa. Check with the U.S. embassy or consulate to be sure you are meeting all requirements for entry into the United States.

Investigate predeparture orientation programs in your country.

Make travel arrangements.

Use this opportunity to continue upgrading your English proficiency.

If possible, earn money toward your expenses.

Make sure all your predeparture activities are complete, and have a good trip!

When colleges decide

Colleges evaluate the application form and documents and decide which applicants will be admitted to the college and which applications will be rejected. You should receive a reply about two or three months after the college receives all of your application documents. If not, write to the office to which you sent your application form and ask about their decision. You should receive a notice.

If you are accepted...
You will be asked to reply by a specific date to let the college know you intend to enroll. Many colleges require a deposit, usually $50 to $100, to confirm your enrollment. This is not an additional fee; the amount is credited to your tuition when you register at the college. After the college hears from you, a form for applying for a visa (Form I-20 for study in the United States) will be sent to you. Be sure to confirm housing reservations with the college.

If you are accepted by more than one college...
If you receive a notice of acceptance from more than one college, you will have to decide which to attend. If you already know your order of preference, notify your first-choice college that you will be attending. Remember to notify the other colleges that accepted you that you will not be attending, and, if they offered you financial aid, notify the financial aid office that you will not be using the financial aid award, so that admission and aid can be offered to another student. If you are not sure which college you prefer, review your college comparison worksheet to help you decide.

If you are not offered the financial aid you need...
The colleges to which you apply may not be able to offer you financial aid, or you may have to choose between a college that offers you aid and a college that offers no financial aid or a lesser amount. If you will not be able to meet the college expense budget (college costs, living expenses, transportation, and English-language training, if needed) without additional help, try to determine if there are any other resources in your country from which you can get some financial help. Contact an advising center or the ministry of education to determine whether there are organizations you have not contacted that have helped other students in your country in recent years.

Looking ahead

Once you have heard from colleges and made your decision, there are many responsibilities to take care of. Don't forget them! These steps also are important in your college admissions process.

Use the following checklist to help keep track of activities in the weeks before you enroll.

Predeparture checklist

☐ Get a passport.

☐ Get a student visa.

☐ Make airline reservations. Find out about baggage allowances and excess baggage charges or shipping rates. Plan to arrive in time for the orientation program. Try to arrive at college during regular hours (8 a.m. to 5 p.m.).

☐ Make hotel reservations if you will be stopping en route to college.

☐ Get shots and a World Health Organization yellow immunization card. Have a physical examination and send the report to your college if it is requested. If you wear glasses, get a prescription from your doctor. If you take special medication, get a supply and a prescription from your doctor.

☐ Request information on insurance from your college. Obtain health insurance.

☐ If you have not already done so, send in your housing reservation form and deposit.

☐ Write (airmail) to the foreign student adviser at your college to notify him or her of the time of your arrival.

☐ If you would like assistance upon arrival, write in advance to International Student Service, 356 West 34th Street, New York, New York 10001, U.S.A.

☐ Be sure you understand U.S. currency (bills and coins) and the exchange rate between your country and the United States.

☐ Arrange to transfer money to a bank in the United States.

☐ Buy traveler's checks (in U.S. currency) to cover costs while traveling to college and for your first month in the United States.

☐ If possible, take about $100 in U.S. currency in small denominations ($1, $5, $10, $20) for use on arrival.

☐ Collect or purchase your necessary clothing, baggage, and personal items. Arrange in advance to ship belongings that will be over the baggage limit on airlines, unless you are willing to pay the excess baggage charges.

☐ Prepare your carry-on bag and items to be carried on you personally. Be sure to set aside your passport, visa, U.S. currency, and college deposit receipt or registration form to carry with you. Your carry-on bag should contain any items you will need in case your regular baggage is temporarily lost.

☐ Label all your baggage on the inside and outside with your name and the name and address of the college to which you are going.

Test information

It is important to get up-to-date information on English-language proficiency and admissions tests that are required by the colleges to which you may apply. Although these standardized tests are offered several times a year at test centers throughout the world, they are not offered in every country on each test date. Write for information well ahead of time; registration dates are often up to two months before the test date. Information on these tests is available through an advising center in your country or by writing to the following addresses.

Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL)

TOEFL is administered 12 times a year through two testing programs: the International Testing Program (Saturday test dates) and the Special Center Testing Program (Friday test dates). A free copy of the TOEFL Bulletin of Information is available from U.S. educational commissions and foundations, U.S. Information Service (USIS) offices, and other international educational organizations such as AMIDEAST. Contact one of these offices in your country or write to:

Glossary of college terms

Accelerated program. A college program of study completed in less time than is usually required, most often by attending classes in summer or by taking extra courses during the regular academic term. Completion of a bachelor's degree program in three years is an example of acceleration.

Accreditation. Recognition by an accrediting organization or agency that a college meets certain acceptable standards in its education programs, services, and facilities. Regional accreditation applies to a college as a whole and not to any particular program or course of study. Specialized accreditation of specific types of schools, such as Bible colleges or trade and technical schools, may also be determined by a national organization. Accreditation by regional accrediting associations and by national accrediting organizations is included in The College Handbook descriptions of colleges. For the names and locations of these associations and a source of information on the accreditation of specialized programs within colleges, see the Accreditation section of this book.

Achievement Tests (ACH). College Board tests in specific secondary school subjects, given at test centers in the United States and other countries on specified dates throughout the year. Used by colleges not only in helping with decisions about admissions but also in course placement and exemption of enrolled freshmen. The international edition of the ACH and SAT bulletin may be ordered from College Board ATP, CN 6200, Princeton, New Jersey 08541-6200, U.S.A.

ACT. See American College Testing Program Assessment.

American College Testing Program Assessment (ACT). Test battery of the American College Testing Program, given at test centers in the United States and other countries on specified dates throughout the year. It includes tests in English usage, mathematics usage, social studies reading, and natural sciences reading. The composite score referred to in some colleges' descriptions is the average of a student's scores on these four tests. Registration materials and information can be ordered from American College Testing Program, P.O. Box 414, Iowa City, Iowa 52243, U.S.A.

Associate degree. A degree granted by a college or university usually after the satisfactory completion of a two-year, full-time program of study, or its part-time equivalent.

Baccalaureate, or bachelor's degree. A degree received after the satisfactory completion of a four-year, full-time program of study (or its part-time equivalent) at a college or university.

Calendar. The system by which an institution divides its year into shorter periods for instruction and awarding credit. The most common calendars are those based on semesters, trimesters, and quarters.

Certificate. An award for completing a particular program or course of study, sometimes given by two-year colleges or vocational or technical schools.

College-preparatory subjects. A term used to describe admissions requirements or recommendations. It is usually understood to mean subjects from the fields of English, history and social studies, foreign languages, mathematics, science, and the arts.

Cooperative education. A college program in which a student alternates between periods of full-time study and full-time employment in a related field. Students are paid for their work at the prevailing rate. Typically, five years are required to complete a bachelor's degree under the cooperative plan, but graduates have the advantage of having completed about a year's practical work experience in addition to their studies.

Credit by examination. Academic credit granted by a college for a student's having demonstrated proficiency in a subject as measured by an examination.

Cross-registration. The practice, through agreements between colleges, of permitting students enrolled at one college or university to enroll in courses at another institution without formally applying for admission to the second institution.

Deferred admission. The practice of permitting students to postpone enrollment for one year after acceptance to a college.

Doctorate, or doctoral degree. The most advanced academic degree offered in the United States, generally awarded after at least three years of graduate work following the bachelor's and after the master's degree.

Double major. Any program of study in which a student completes the requirements of two majors concurrently.

First professional degree. A degree granted for completion of academic requirements for selected professions. The programs of study require at least two years of previous college work for entrance and at least six years of college work for completion. The first professional degrees are listed in the fields of study code list (see the appendix).

Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse (FSIC). This service helps overseas students interested in study at the undergraduate and graduate levels in the United States by identifying institutions that meet their particular interests and needs. Sponsored by the National Liaison Committee on Foreign Student Admissions and operated by the College Board, the Clearinghouse sorts by computer through the characteristics of more than 1,900 colleges to select a list that matches a variety of specifications provided by each student. The resulting report sent to the student also includes information on admissions test requirements, financial aid for foreign students, total costs, and availability of on-campus services and housing. See the appendix of this book for instructions on using the Clearinghouse.

4-1-4. A variation on the semester calendar system, the 4-1-4 calendar consists of two terms of about 16 weeks each, separated by a one-month intersession used for intensive short courses, independent study, off-campus work, or other types of instruction.

FSIC. See Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse.

GMAT. See Graduate Management Admissions Test.

Grade-point average or ratio. A system used by many colleges for evaluating the overall scholastic performance of students. It is found by first determining the number of grade points a student has earned in each course completed and then dividing the sum of all grade points by the number of hours of course work carried. Grade points are found by multiplying the number of hours given for a course by the student's grade in the course. The most common system of numerical values for grades is A = 4, B = 3, C = 2, D = 1, E or F = 0. Also called quality-point average or ratio.

Graduate Management Admissions Test (GMAT). Graduate schools of business usually require applicants to take this test, which measures general verbal and mathematical skills developed over a long period of time and associated with success in the first year of study at graduate schools of management/business. The test is given throughout the United States and overseas. Registration materials and information on test dates and fees may be obtained from Educational Testing Service, CN 6103, Princeton, New Jersey 08541-6103, U.S.A.

Graduate Record Examinations (GRE). GREs are administered by Educational Testing Service for the Graduate Record Examinations Board. The tests include a 3½-hour General Test designed to measure verbal, quantitative, and analytical ability, and 17 separate Subject Tests, each about three hours in length. Subject Tests measure knowledge and understanding of subject matter basic to graduate study in specific fields. Scores on either the General or Subject Tests, or both, are used by many graduate and professional schools and fellowship sponsors to supplement undergraduate records and other indicators of students' potential for graduate study. The test is given throughout the United States and overseas. The GRE Information Bulletin, which includes registration forms, test dates, and fees, is available at no cost from Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08541-6014, U.S.A.

Graduate study. A program leading to a master's degree or doctoral degree; advanced study generally following the bachelor's degree.

GRE. See Graduate Record Examinations.

Honors program. Any special program for very able students that offers the opportunity for educational enrichment, independent study, acceleration, or some combination of these.

Independent study. An arrangement that allows students to complete some of their college program by studying independently instead of attending scheduled classes and completing group assignments. Typically, students plan programs of study in consultation with a faculty adviser or committee to whom they may report periodically and submit a final report for evaluation.

Interdisciplinary. Refers to programs or courses that use the knowledge from a number of academic disciplines, such as a combination of biology and physical sciences or of engineering and business.

Internships. Short-term, supervised work experiences, usually related to a student's major field, for which the student earns academic credit. The work can be full or part time, on or off campus, paid or unpaid. Student teaching and apprenticeships are examples of internships.

Liberal arts program. A bachelor's degree program consisting of courses selected from among history, anthropology, literature, chemistry, English, mathematics, and other general disciplines, intended primarily to provide general knowledge. The program also satisfies preprofessional program requirements.

Major. The academic discipline, or group of disciplines, that constitute the primary emphasis of a student's high school, college, or university program. Also known as a field of concentration.

Master's degree. The diploma awarded after one or more years of graduate work following the bachelor's degree.

Open admissions. The college policy of admitting high school graduates and other adults generally without regard to conventional academic qualifications, such as high school subjects, high school grades, and admissions test scores. Virtually all applicants with a high school diploma or its equivalent are accepted.

Pass-fail grading system. Some colleges permit rating students' quality of performance in their courses as either passing or failing instead of giving grades to indicate various levels of passing work. The college's entire grading system may follow this pattern, or it may be an optional one for individual students in specific courses.

Private institution. Colleges and universities that receive little or no direct financial support from government sources. Also known as independent institutions.

Public institution. Colleges and universities that receive substantial financial support from local or state government sources.

Quarter. An academic period, consisting of 12 weeks, equal in value to two-thirds of a semester. Fifteen quarter-hour credits equal 10 semester-hour credits. The calendar year under the quarter system is divided into four equal terms.

Residency requirements. Most colleges and universities require that a student spend a minimum number of terms taking courses on campus (as opposed to independent study or transfer credits from other colleges) to be eligible for graduation. Also, residency requirements can refer to the minimum amount of time a student is required to have lived in a state in order to be eligible for in-state tuition at a public (state-controlled) college or university.

Rolling admissions. A process whereby admission decisions are made and reported as applications are received instead of being held until a specified date.

SAT. See Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). The College Board's test of developed verbal and mathematical reasoning abilities, given on specified dates throughout the year at test centers in the United States and other countries. It includes the Test of Standard Written English, whose questions evaluate the ability to recognize standard written English, the language of most textbooks. The SAT is required of substantially all applicants by many colleges and sponsors of financial aid programs.

Semester. A period of about 17 or 18 weeks that makes up half the usual academic year in colleges using this kind of calendar.

Terminal program. An education program designed to prepare students for immediate employment. These programs usually can be completed in less than four years beyond high school and are available in many junior colleges, community colleges, and vocational-technical institutes.

Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). Established by the College Board and the Graduate Record Examinations Board, this test helps foreign students demonstrate their English-language proficiency at the advanced level required for study in colleges and universities in the United States. Many colleges require that their foreign applicants take the test as part of their admissions requirements for both the undergraduate and graduate levels. An information bulletin is available at no cost from U.S. Information Service offices, U.S. educational commissions and foundations, advising centers, and some private educational organizations, or by writing to TOEFL, CN 6154, Princeton, New Jersey 08541-6154, U.S.A.

TOEFL. See Test of English as a Foreign Language.

Transcript. A true copy of a student's official academic record.

Transfer program. An education program in a two-year college that is offered primarily for students who plan to continue their studies in a four-year college or university.

Transfer student. A student who has attended another college for any period, which may be defined by various colleges as ranging from a single term to up to three years. A transfer student may receive credit for all or some of the courses successfully completed before the transfer.

Trimester. An academic calendar period of about 15 weeks. Three trimesters make up one academic year. Students make normal progress by attending two of the trimesters each year and in some colleges can accelerate their programs by attending all three trimesters in one or more years.

Undergraduate study. A program leading to an associate or bachelor's degree; generally follows high school.

Upper-division college. A college offering bachelor's degree programs that begin with the junior year. Entering students must have completed the first two years at other colleges.

Part II. Information on U.S. colleges and universities

How to use the information tables

These tables provide detailed information on 1,955 undergraduate and graduate institutions in the United States that chose to provide information for foreign students. The data were collected directly from the institutions by written questionnaires and telephone follow-up from January through June 1987.

There are separate listings for colleges offering undergraduate degrees (associate, bachelor's) and institutions offering graduate degrees (master's, doctoral, first professional).

Undergraduate information

The names of the colleges are listed alphabetically by state. Institutions are listed by their full names, which are not always the ones in popular use. For example, UCLA is listed as University of California at Los Angeles. If a college is part of a large system, it usually appears under the system name. For example, all the names of the various colleges of Rutgers University begin with Rutgers—The State University of New Jersey. An asterisk preceding the name of the college indicates that it also offers graduate study and has a second listing in the graduate section of these tables. The mailing address and the telephone and telex numbers (when available) of each college are given in the Directory of Colleges later in this book. The columns in this section include the following information.

Control/degrees. This column shows whether the institution is private (Pr) or public (Pu) and whether the college offers associate degrees (A), bachelor's degrees (B), or both (AB).

Enrollment. The first figure is the total number of undergraduate students enrolled. The second figure is the number of undergraduate foreign students enrolled.

Tests required. If the college requires one or more of the following standardized admissions tests, they are indicated in this column: Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), American College Testing Assessment (ACT), Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). A slash (/) between two tests means that either test is required; for example, SAT/TOEFL means that applicants must take either the SAT or TOEFL. A plus (+) between tests means that both are required; for example, SAT + TOEFL means that applicants must take both the SAT and TOEFL.

TOEFL minimum. This is the minimum score on TOEFL that is generally acceptable to the college as an indicator of English-language proficiency.

Application. The deadline is generally the last date by which the college will accept application forms, test scores, transcripts, and other documents required for the admissions process. Remember that many colleges fill their classes well in advance of this date, so complete your applications as soon as possible before the deadline. The application fee is required at the time you send your application form; the figure here is in U.S. dollars.

Student services. These columns indicate whether the college offers the following services for foreign students: foreign student adviser, foreign student orientation program, intensive English-language (IEL) program on campus, or summer housing on campus during June, July, and August.

Academic and calendar year costs. The academic year figure for tuition/fees represents the tuition and general fees the college charges most first-year, full-time foreign students for the nine-month academic year. The calendar year figure for tuition/fees represents the tuition and general fees the college charges most full-time foreign students who are enrolled for the full 12-month calendar year. The nine-month and 12-month living costs include room and board, books and supplies, and personal expenses such as clothing, laundry, and health insurance. These costs do not include travel to and from your home country. Costs are for 1987-88, unless otherwise indicated.

Financial aid. The number of undergraduate foreign students who applied for financial aid in the 1986-87 academic year is listed first, followed by the percentage of these students who received some aid. The next figure indicates the total amount of aid (in U.S. dollars) awarded to foreign undergraduate students. The application deadline is the last date by which the college will accept financial aid applications. Remember that there is not enough financial aid to meet the needs of all applicants and that the aid available may be assigned well in advance of the deadline, so complete the financial aid application requirements as soon as possible.

Graduate information

Institution names are listed alphabetically by state. Mailing addresses and telephone and telex numbers (when available) for these institutions are given in the Directory of Colleges later in this book. The columns in this section include the following information.

Control/degrees. This column shows whether the institution is private (Pr) or public (Pu) and whether it offers master's (M), doctoral (D), or first professional (F) degree programs.

Enrollment. The first figure is the total number of students enrolled in graduate study. The second figure is the number of foreign students enrolled in graduate study.

Tests required. An X in these columns indicates that the college requires applicants to its programs to take the following tests: Graduate Management Admissions Test (GMAT) for master's in business administration programs, Law School Admissions Test (LSAT) for law school, Medical College Admissions Test (MCAT) for medical school, Graduate Records Examination (GRE) for other graduate study, and Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). If TOEFL is indicated, it is generally required of all foreign students applying to graduate programs.

TOEFL minimum. This is the minimum TOEFL score that is generally acceptable to the institution as an indicator of English-language proficiency.

Application deadline. This is generally the last date by which the college will accept applications for admission. Remember that programs may be filled well in advance of this date, so complete all application requirements as soon as possible.

Student services. An X in these columns indicates that the college has a foreign student adviser, foreign student orientation program, or intensive English-language (IEL) program on campus.

Housing. An X in the first of these two columns indicates that the college has housing during the summer months (June, July, and August) for foreign students. The second column indicates whether there is housing for single students (S), married students (M), or both (S/M).

Academic and calendar year costs. The academic year figure for tuition/fees represents the tuition and general fees the college charges most first-year, full-time foreign students enrolled in graduate study for the nine-month academic year. The calendar year figure for tuition/fees represents the tuition and general fees the college charges most full-time foreign students who are enrolled in graduate study for the full 12-month calendar year. The nine-month and 12-month living costs include room and board, books and supplies, and personal expenses such as clothing, laundry, and health insurance. These costs do not include travel to and from your home country or living expenses for dependents of married students. Costs are for 1987-88 unless otherwise indicated.

Financial aid. The number of graduate foreign students who applied for financial aid in the 1986-87 academic year is listed first, followed by the percentage of these students who received some aid. The final column indicates the total amount of aid (in U.S. dollars) awarded to foreign graduate students.

Colleges offering full admission without English-language proficiency

Following the detailed graduate and undergraduate tables is a list of institutions that will offer full academic admission to applicants whose English skills will not permit them to pursue academic course work during their first term. English-language proficiency is defined differently by different institutions. Be sure to check with the colleges you are interested in if there is any question about your English-language skills.

Directory of colleges

This listing gives the full name and mailing address for each institution listed in the undergraduate and graduate tables in this section. It includes telephone numbers and, when available, telex numbers for the colleges and universities. The office to contact for further information about the institution and for application procedures and forms is also given.

Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse

The Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse (FSIC) is a computerized means of assisting you in your search for a college or university in the United States. The FSIC computer program will:

- assist you in narrowing the list of colleges that interest you
- help you decide which college characteristics are important for you
- save valuable time by utilizing a computer program to sort through data on more than 1,900 institutions and 560 fields of study in the United States
- provide a list of institutions that meet your specifications for
  - costs
  - field of study
  - financial aid
  - location
  - test requirements
  - housing availability
  - other factors important to your choice of institution

Where can you use the program in your country?

The Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse is available at many advising centers operated by the United States Information Service, Fulbright Commissions, binational centers, AMIDEAST offices, Institute for International Education (IIE) offices, and other advising services around the world. It is best to use the FSIC in consultation with an experienced educational adviser. You may write, telephone, or visit the advising center in your country, or a convenient neighboring country, to see if the program is available. The names and addresses of advising centers around the world are listed in this book under "Sources of Information and Advising in Your Country."

How can I use the program if it is not available locally?

If the Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse is not available through an educational advising center convenient to you, it is possible to use it by mail through the College Board's Office of International Education. There is a $15 (U.S. dollars) charge for this service. The process may take several weeks depending on speed of mail delivery. In order to use the program in this manner, follow these simple steps:

1. Locate the Student Specification Form at the end of this book. Tear it out carefully or make a copy of it on a duplicating machine.
2. Carefully answer all questions on the Student Specification Form except Question C, "Which field of study do you wish to follow?" Be sure your correct mailing address, including your country, is listed clearly in the space marked "address."
3. Go to the following Fields of Study Code List and locate the field of study in which you are most interested.
4. Transfer the code number of your chosen field of study to Question C on the Student Specification Form.
5. Mail your completed Student Specification Form, together with $15 (see below for accepted forms of payment) to:

The College Board
Office of International Education
Box FS
1717 Massachusetts Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20036 U.S.A.

Payment accompanying your Student Specification Form must be made by bank check drawn on a U.S. bank, or by international money order. All other forms of payment, including UNESCO coupons, international postal reply coupons, demand drafts, or foreign checks will be returned. Do not send cash.

If your Student Specification Form is completed correctly, a Student Report that lists institutions appropriate for you will be sent to you within one week of receipt of your request. A letter will be included explaining how to interpret the report, as well as copies of Entering Higher Education in the United States and Financial Planning for Study in the United States, published by the College Board.

Fields of study code list

Instructions for use

This list contains 568 fields of study and each has a code number. They have been separated into groups representing general areas of study.

1. Find the field of study in which you are most interested.

2. Check whether the field of study you have selected is available at the degree level you are seeking by reading the degree-level codes (A B M D P) to the right of each field of study. A key to the abbreviations is provided below.

3. Locate the three-digit code number to the left of the field of study. Enter this number on your Student Specification Form.

A. WHAT DEGREE DO YOU WISH TO OBTAIN IN THE UNITED STATES?
Prospective undergraduates may choose a program of study leading to an Associate Degree (two years), or Bachelor's Degree (minimum four years). Please put an X in the box next to your preference.

Prospective graduate students may choose a program of study leading to a Master's Degree, Doctorate, or First Professional Degree. Please put an X in the box next to your preference.

02 ☐ Bachelor

GRADUATES ONLY
(Choose one)
03 ☐ Master's Degree
04 ☐ Doctorate
05 ☐ First Professional Degree

B. HOW MUCH MONEY DO YOU HAVE AVAILABLE EACH YEAR TO PAY FOR STUDY IN THE UNITED STATES?
This figure should include the total amount, in U.S. dollars, of personal funds and any home-country scholarships, loans, or aid you know will be available during each year of study. This figure should not include any financial aid you hope to receive from a college in the United States.

Put an X in the box next to the total amount of financial resources you have available each year to cover costs of attending college in the United States.

Financial aid from colleges in the United States for incoming foreign students is extremely limited and may be restricted to certain fields of study. Although the Clearinghouse can provide information about institutions that do offer financial aid, it cannot tell you if you will be eligible. If financial aid is essential to your being able to study in the United States, you should write to the institutions listed on your Student Report and ask about the requirements for receiving aid and how to apply for it.

B. Student's Annual Available Funds
(Choose one)
01 ☐ Up to $ 5,000
02 ☐ Up to $ 7,500
03 ☐ Up to $10,000
04 ☐ Up to $12,500
05 ☐ Up to $15,000
06 ☐ Up to $17,500
07 ☐ Up to $20,000
08 ☐ Over $20,000

C. WHICH FIELD OF STUDY DO YOU WISH TO FOLLOW?
Review the Fields of Study Code List very carefully and select the field(s) you wish to follow. Write in the code number(s) of the field(s) of study in the spaces provided: OPTION 1 (one field) or OPTION 2 (two fields).

Make every effort to identify only one field that best represents what you wish to study and enter this beside Option 1. This should provide you with a good selection of institutions on your Student Report from which to choose. Option 2 should be selected only if you wish to follow two fields of study at the same time. If you do choose Option 2 (two fields of study), this could result in a reduced number of institutions that meet your specifications.

D. IN WHAT AREA OF THE UNITED STATES WOULD YOU LIKE TO STUDY?
Look at your map to answer this question. If geographic location is not important to you, put an X in the box next to NO PREFERENCE.
OR
To select an entire region, for example, "Entire New England Region," put an X in the box next to the desired region. You may select up to eight regions.

OR

To select one or more individual states, for example, "Alabama" and "Florida", put an X in the box next to the state(s) you prefer. You may select up to 50 states, Washington, D.C., and Puerto Rico.

OR

To select a mixture of regions and states, for example, "Entire New England Region", and "Alabama" and "Florida", put an X in the box next to the desired region(s) or state(s). Please do not select individual states in a region that has already been selected.

E. DO YOU WANT TO ATTEND CLASSES DURING THE SUMMER?

The length of an academic year in the United States is generally about nine months, beginning in August or September and ending in May or June. Many colleges also offer a full-year program that includes a summer session in July and August. Attendance at summer sessions may assist students in completing their program in less time.

If you prefer to attend a college offering summer sessions, put an X in the box next to "Summer Session." If you do choose "Summer Session," this could result in a reduced number of institutions that meet your specifications. If attending a summer session is not important, put an X in the box next to NO PREFERENCE.

F. DO YOU PREFER TO LIVE ON THE COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY CAMPUS?

If it does not matter to you whether you live on campus, put an X in the box next to NO PREFERENCE.

OR

If you prefer to live in a university dormitory on campus and are unmarried, or if you are married and your spouse will not be accompanying you, put an X in the box next to ON-CAMPUS HOUSING: UNMARRIED STUDENTS.

OR

If your family will be accompanying you and you wish to live in university housing on campus, put an X in the box next to ON-CAMPUS HOUSING: MARRIED STUDENTS.

You should be aware that some institutions may require undergraduates, particularly during their first year, to live in on-campus housing.

04 ☐ Town (2,500-49,999)
05 ☐ Rural (Under 2,500)

H. WHAT SIZE COLLEGE WOULD YOU PREFER TO ATTEND?

If the size of the student enrollment is not important to you, put an X in the box next to NO PREFERENCE.

OR

If it is important to you, select one of the following classifications: SMALL (under 2,000), MEDIUM (2,000-7,499), or LARGE (over 7,500).

H. Size of College or University
(Choose one)
00 ☐ No Preference
01 ☐ Small (Under 2,000 Students)
02 ☐ Medium (2,000-7,499 Students)
03 ☐ Large (Over 7,500 Students)

NOTE: You may wish to discuss the following questions with an educational adviser before answering.

I. HOW DIFFICULT WILL IT BE FOR ME TO BE ADMITTED? (PROSPECTIVE UNDERGRADUATES ONLY)
Acceptance ratios, that is, the total number of students admitted (American and foreign) compared to the total number who apply, allow you to identify the degree of difficulty in gaining admission to institutions listed on your Student Report.

If you do not wish to specify an acceptance ratio, put an X in the box next to NO PREFERENCE.

OR

If you desire an institution that admits all students meeting minimum requirements, put an X in the box that indicates OPEN ADMISSIONS. Due to residency requirements, acceptance ratios for some public institutions may be more restrictive for foreign students.

OR

If you desire an institution that admits between 50-99 percent of those who apply, put an X in the box next to MODERATELY SELECTIVE. Due to residency requirements, acceptance ratios for some public institutions may be more restrictive for foreign students.

OR

If you desire an institution that admits fewer than 50 percent of those applying, put an X in the box next to HIGHLY SELECTIVE.

I. Acceptance Ratio

00 ☐ No Preference
01 ☐ Open Admissions
02 ☐ Moderately Selective
03 ☐ Highly Selective

J. DO YOU HAVE ANY SPECIFICATIONS THAT MUST BE MET BEFORE YOU WOULD EVEN CONSIDER APPLYING TO A COLLEGE?
This is an optional question. Normally, your Student Report would provide information on institutions meeting all your specifications and some that may not meet one or more of your requirements. Therefore, you may be presented with institutions that are attractive but do not exactly match your specifications.

Through ESSENTIAL SPECIFICATIONS you have the option of identifying one or more specifications as essential to your consideration of an institution. This means that your Student Report will not include any institution not meeting those specifications. Consider the use of this option carefully before putting an X in the box next to any specification.

EXAMPLE: The DEGREE SOUGHT and FIELD OF STUDY specifications are automatically considered "essential" because you would not want to apply to an institution that did not offer the academic program you are seeking. If any other specification on this form is as important as your academic program, you should consider it to be an ESSENTIAL SPECIFICATION.
